N. S. G. W. PLAN FOR BIG CLASS

Plans for a big class initiation to be held on Thursday evening, September 7, were made by Richmond Parlor ..o. 217, Native Sons of the Golden West, at its meeting last night in Musicians' hall. It is planned to serve an elaborate banquet on that night, R. M. Salsado heading the committee in charge.

Andy Summers, R. H. Cunningham and R. M. Salcedo made interesting reports on the district meeting held Wednesday evening at Antioch which they attended as delegates from Richmond Parlor. Plans were made at the county meeting for the participation of all county parlors in the Admission Day celebration to be held at San Jose under the auspices of the Native Sons. The Contra Costa parlors plan to march in a body in the big parade at the celebration, and also enter a float representing the industries of the county. The Native Daughters are also expected to participate in the festivities.

Richmond Parlor developed plans last evening for a membership campaign to start immediately. President Louis E. Davis presided over the meeting.

When we see the way a fool man goes around these sweltering days, wearing a high, stiffly starched collar, it makes us feel kind of guilty poking fun at the ladies for wearing summer furs.

AM. LEGION WILL ELECT HEAD TONIGHT

A commander to succeed Thomas M. Carlson will be elected at tonight's meeting of Richmond Post No. 10, American Legion. Two members of the executive committee also are to be chosen.

There is a great program to be projected by the American Legion in its national scope, and the department of California is scheduled to do its part in the great project. In order that California may take its rightful place in Legion affairs, it is incumbent upon each post in the state to do its individual part.

Richmond ought to be a great American Legion town.

The field is ripe.

All Legion men are urged to be present at tonight's meeting and take an active and outspoken part in the selection of the commander and the two executive committeemen.

"Rod Just a Boy" Says Mother of Man Two Women Cry For

". . . After all she is Rod's wife and Rod—well, Rod has done wrong, but he is just a boy and has never grown up.

"What do you think he said to me the other night when I threatened to thrash him, beat him to a pulp?

"Rod said. 'Make it raisin pulp, mother, and I'll get 150 gallons out of it."

Thus spoke yesterday Mrs. Rodney Kendrick Sr., the mother of the man for whose love two women are waging a battle as old as Life itself.

In a tear-interpolated interview given out in her Oakland home the mother tore down the last veil of secrecy over the Bohemian love tangle and revealed in all of its stark nudity, the strange triangle in which Mrs. Edith Huntington Spreckels Wakefield, leading figure in Sausalito's art set, is declared to have offered Mrs. Nellie Kendrick, the son's invalid wife, $100 a month for life if she would divorce Kendrick so that she (Mrs. Wakefield) could marry him.

Both Irresponsible

Of her son, Rodney Kendrick, a newspaper artist, and the love bargain, Mrs. Kendrick, Sr., speaks further:

"If Rod marries Mrs. Wakefield I'll have them both to keep. They are both irresponsible. Neither of them has ever grown up.

"I have pleaded, raged, stormed with these children for the last two months, but all to no avail. Nothing could stop them in their mad infatuation. Rod wouldn't listen—Edith just laughed my fears to scorn and Nellie, his wife, assured me I was a fool—that everything was all right," Mrs. Kendrick, Sr., said.

Pleaded With Wife

"I pleaded with Nellie not to go to the Wakefield home, but she would go 'Why, mother, how silly you are getting to be,' she would say when I pleaded with her not to go to Sausalito as a guest of Mrs. Wakefield. 'The affection between Edith an Rod is the most beautiful thing in the world. It's pure and clean above the sordidness of life.' So they went.

"But I know life. I knew that throwing Rod and Edith together in such close quarters was just like setting a match to dynamite.

"I went to the Wakefield home and pleaded again and again.

"They all three laughed me to scorn. I was determined that little June, my granddaughter, should not stay there, so I took her away, brought her here to this little cottage.

"Nellie protested that she and Rod had a right to have their own child. I knew that she and Rod were not fit to have her. Rod was irresponsible and Nellie too ill to look after the baby."

Mrs. Kendrick paused to wipe away the tears. Then she continued:

Tells of Offer

"Nellie was the first one to tell me that she had been offered $100 a month to release Rod—to get a divorce.

"I was horrified and told them all so. After I thought it over I concluded that it had to come, the divorce, sooner or later."

Mrs. Kendrick told of the marriage of Nellie and Rod, the birth of their child and Nellie's illness.

"Nellie and Rod realized their mistake in marrying too late," she said.

"Nellie grew worse. Rod sent her to a sanitarium.

"He rented an old shack and fitted up a studio where he lived. Every cent that boy made went to take care of Nellie in the sanitarium at Ross.

Tragedy Sure

"After all a mother is only human and I could see the tragedy for them. Then Rod began to drift. The burden was too great for him. I helped them all I could."

Meanwhile the wife's threatened $25,000 alienation suit was scheduled to have been filed today, but Senator Frank Carr of Oakland, attorney for Mrs. Kendrick, announced early today that the pressure of other business had postponed this, and that it probably would be filed tomorrow.

117 Part Time Students Here

Regular class work in the part time classes of the Richmond high school is now under way, with a total of 117 studens already enrolled. Wilson is principal and co-ordinator of part time work, and the instructors are Mrs. Helen B. Shedden and Mrs. May Warnick.

All part time students are required to take civics and a choice of not more than three other subjects of one hour a week each. Sewing, music and art work are some of the new courses added this year. The forwarding of the papers means that Pittsburg has qualified for a lodge and the work now to be done to assure it being instituted is the formality of filling out and returning the application for dispensaton.

The first step toward organzation will be taken at a big booster meeting of members of the Los Medanos club, the local organization of Elks, at the club rooms in the Moose building Thursday evening at 7 o'clock.

Women Fight With Fists All for Love

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. .24—Approximately 500 persons formed a ring last night in which two women, Eileen Clossen, 35, and Sadie B. Palmer, 32, fought with bare fists for the love of a man. The man, a witness of the fray, is said to have told the contestants he would throw his affections to the winner.

Spectators told in court today of bets being placed. Miss Palmer landed the first blow, a right to the jaw. Her opponent countered with an uppercut, but injured her hand. Both went into a clinch. Miss Clossen broke away and when the other swung, witnesses say, she dodged and retaliated with a blow to the chin for a knockout. Both women were arrested and fined $10 each in City Court today.

KEEP CALIFORNIA A SOFT SPOT FOR THE MACHINE

The center of that "one white spot of prosperity" is the Executive Mansion. "While all the rest of the nation and the world have been laboring under business depression," as Governor Stephens' campaign literature proclaims, this spot has gleamed the brightest.

In that memorable winter of 1919-20, when the war had left us gasping in the grip of old H. C. L., Governor Stephens, spurred on by stern necessity, persuaded the Board of Control to pass a resolution withdrawing $465.00 from the Emergency Fund for the following bill:

SHREVE & COMPANY
San Francisco

Dec. 1, 1919.

Executive Mansion:

4 Place Plates	$2.75
4 Bon Bon Plates	1.00
4 Sherbets	.90
	$465

The appropriation of 1919 for repairs, furnishing and equipment of the Executive Mansion, amounting to $5,000, had become depleted by a little bill of $592.20 paid in January, 1920, to the City of Paris at San Francisco, for the following articles;

16 guest towels	$ 13.00
3 dozen napkins	90.00
1 cloth	45.50
1 dozen towels	29.00
15 linen towels	9.00
2 cloths	11.00
1 spread	27.00
2 spreads	42.00
2 spreads	37.00
1 silk comforter	22.50
1 pair blankets	25.00
5 pairs gauze curtains	204.80
1 special pillow	39.00
Less $12.60 discount	$614.70

Vouchers of this sort create more than the usual interest because there seems to be a general impression that the present Governor's family spend a great deal of time away from Sacramento, and the occasions on which the Executive Mansion has been utilized for entertainment are rumored to be rare.

The first act of the governor in 1917 was to purchase a supply of towels, sheets, quilts and spreads. In the period between July, 1919, and November, 1921, there was purchased for the Executive Mansion 20 sheets, 7 spreads, 2 silk comforters, 17 pillows, 105 towels, 3 dozen napkins and 18 pairs of curtains. The 18 pairs of curtains cost $582.80.

As the governor says, this has been a "business-like administration" with "a full dollar's" return secured for every dollar expended."

The State of California has indeed been generous in its efforts to keep California "a soft spot for the state machine."

We pay our governor an annual salary of $10,000 being one of the few states in which that salary is paid.

For the support of the Executive Mansion each year there is appropriated the sum of $8,750, approximately $725 a month, and for which the Governor is not required to file any vouchers.

The postage, traveling and contingent fund is available each year in the amount of $9,200, and no vouchers as to the manner of its expenditure are required of the governor. Each year it is expended to the penny.

However, the brightest ray, right in the center of the "one white spot" is the Secret Service Fund of $10,000, $5,000 available each year. The Governor is not required to file vouchers to account for the expenditure of this fund either, and the secret service investigations come out to a penny, $5,000 at the end of the year. Only another evidence of what the Governor calls "a business-like, economical and efficient administration."

Almost every legislature makes an appropriation for repairs, furnishings and equipment for the Executive Mansion. In 1919 and again in 1921 there was appropriated $5,000 for this purpose for the biennium. This appropriation is scrupulously expended, if only to purchase a $225 Melodia to preserve harmony. Last year there was expended $2,453.44 of the $2,500 available.

Then there is the $2,400 appropriation for auto repairs made in 1921, from which $1,171 was spent in the last fiscal years. On the printing fund of $750 a year. Up to June 30, there had only be expended $338, but the printing demands may have increased between June 30, and August 29.

The total amount expended by the Governor from all these various appropriations in the year ending uJne 30, 1922, was $37,512.44, and for $32,500 he was not required to file vouchers.

In other words the governor spent nearly three times his salary, in addition thereto, in "strengthening and forwarding the progressive government."

HOW BONUS MONEY GOES

With a federal army bonus apparently assured there is renewed interest in the way the service men will spend their money—when and if they get it. A pretty good line on that question can be gained from an inquiry made in Ohio regarding the use made of the state bonus.

It develops that about 50 per cent of the money has been devoted to purposes which can be characterized aas "investments"—that is, payments on property, stocks and bonds and savings accounts. About 20 per cent more has gone for clothing and house furnishings and the balance for various purposes.

The most impressive thing about this report is the thrifty use made of the money, in the face of prophesies that most of it would be frittered away foolishly.

A fact hardly less noteworthy is that the expenditures reported give little evidence of the personal hardship which the bonus was originally designed to relieve. The recipients simply took the money and made good use of it, just as any other body of respectable citizens would be expencted to do.

This may or may not be an argument in favor of the federal bonus. The two facts brought out seem in a way, to cancel each other as bonus arguments. Thus, the men as a whole don't seem to need the bonus; but on the other hand, they wouldn't waste it if they got it.

Argument, however, is no longer of any avail in this connection, and facts pro or con do not matter. The one big fact, as everybody recognizes, is that congressmen want the support of the veterans and friends in the fall campaign.

JUDGING AT THE FAIR

Officials of the agricultural extenson department of the Minnesota state university are urging that the judging and awarding of prizes at county, state and community fairs be made a more interesting and educational feature. They offer this suggestion among others:

"Officials of fairs should provide an adequate arena where demonstrations can be given in the judging of the more important classes at certain definite periods. To accomplish this the superintendents and officials will have to get the exhibts staged systematically and on time."

The judging and prize-giving are among the most important features of any fair. Too often they are conducted sketchily. In a little roped-off sawdust space, or a dim corner of some hall, the judges fumble and whisper. Somebody writes something down in a little book. Somebody else pins a blue ribbon on a pumpkin or a red rosette on a calf's halter and nobody knows anything about it except that a decision has been reached.

If space and time are allowed for onlookers to see and hear clearly how the decisions are arrived at, the process is infinitely more interesting and assumes an educational value lacking in the other method. Furthermore, by this sort of procedure most of the petty jealousies which sometimes result from prize awards would be avoid d in the light of understanding.

Running a casual eye over the men being nominated for public office this year, one finds it hard to be sure that the direct primary system is a complete and unqaulified success.

NEWSPAPERMAN AND TWO WOMEN

Oakland, Aug. 24.—"It will cost Mrs Wakefield $25,000 if she wants to get Rodney Kendricks," declared Attorney Frank M. Carr, representing Mrs Kendrick, late this afternoon.

"We have determined to file an alienation of affection suit for that amount. Mrs. Kendrick wants to be reasonable, but believed this is the smallest amount which can insure the future of her 4-months-old baby girl."

Mrs. Rodney Kendrick first attracted attention to the situation when she made public a statement in which she declared Mrs. Wakefield had promised her $100 a month for life and offered to support her baby if she would divorce her husband, an artist.

Mrs. Wakefield issued a statement admitting her love for Kendrick, her desire to marry him and her willingness to see that Mrs. Kendrick and her baby were provided for.

Kendrick's mother, said to have been a witness to the conversation between Mrs. Wakefield and Mrs. Kendrick, denied published statements that Mrs. Wakefield had made a flat offer of $100 a month to Mrs. Kendrick if she would devorce Kendrick.

"Mrs. Wakefield did say that she had her own money and that Mrs. Kendrick could have Mr. Kendrick's income for her support, as far as she was concerned." Kendrick's mother declared today.

The mother also denied published intimations that Kendrick and Mrs. Wakefield had gone on a camping trip alone to Lake Tahoe.

PROPAGANDA CLOGS MAILS

Due to the large amount of election literature flowing through the mails the Richmond post office is experiencing one of the busiest periods of the year. Approximately 17,000 pieces of first-class mail was handled Wednesday morning by the post office, not including sample ballots, which are second class matter. The normal number is about 10,000.

New Faces Tonight At Dreamland Rink

New faces feature the Dreamland fight card for this evening. Sailor Larry, the colored scrapper, who meets Frankie Murphy in the main event, has never appeared hereabouts. In Los Angeles, where he has been doing most of his milling, he is looked upon as a tough nut. Murphy fought for Tommy Simpson across the bay, and, while he isn't the dashing, tearing-in type of scrapper, he is nevertheless a good workman and a fellow who delights in giving out punishment of the in-fighting sort.

Young Sommers, another stranger, meets Chick Roach of Los Angeles. Roach fought Gene Cline some weeks ago and lost out, but he is a shifty lad.

Frankie McCann meets Abe Mishkind in the special bout, with the pick of the preliminary boys mixing in the fights as follows: Young Papke vs. Young Compston; Racehorse Roberts vs. Sailor Emmett; Harry Harris vs. Johnny Lamar; Tommy Haris vs. Bobbie Moore.

...ramatic Hit Is "Foolish Wives" at Macdonald Theater

Doubtless many film fans with ...d memories will note something ...iliar in the features of the maid, ...ruschka, who is the much-abused

...ant in the villa of the bogus ...ian nobles at Monte Carlo. She ... the Russian peasant so per- ...y, and with dog-like devotion ...its to being abused and robbed ... finally, in a fit of jealous rage, ...becomes a homicidal maniac and ... fire to the tower where Count ...us is entertaining his latest ...test.

...s difficult to believe that this ...same Dale Fuller who used to convulse audiences in Mack Sennett comedies, playing comedy servant girls opposite Charles Murray. Yet such is the case, and references to old program files show that Miss Fuller made her stage debut in "The Flirting Princess," with "Old King" Harry Bulger. She also played in the Murray and Mack productions.

For three years Miss Fuller was a favorite funmaker in film farces, until an accident laid her up for two long years. Whether during that period of enforced idleness she developed the latent dramatic talent which is said to exist in every comedian, or whether, after all, "the truest laughter always trembles on the verge of tears," the fact is evident in "Foolish Wives" that Dale Fuller is an emotional actress. In a scene of startling "close-ups" she portrays the birth of madness in the bewildered brain of the poor peasant girl, and her action in the incendiary scene up to the time of her final exit is fairly hair-raising. This is only one of the novel sensations in "Foolish Wives."

"Foolish Wives" will be shown again tonight.

The comedy feature is Roy Atwell in "Loose Wheels."

Carter DeHavens at T. & D. Theater in "My Lady Friends"

"My Lady Friends," an excrutiatingly funny farce, co-starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, will start a two-day run at the Richmond T. & D. theater today as a First National attraction.

Reports from other cities state that the production is one of the most humorous ever shown on the screen, and that the De Havens have outdone their fromer successful efforts.

"My Lady Friends" was adapted from the stage play of the same name, by Emile Nyitray and Frank Mandel. Lloyd Ingraham directed it and the cast includes Thomas G. Lingham, Helen Raymond, Helen Lynch, Lincoln Stedman, May Wallace, Hazel Howell, Clara Morris and Ruth Ashby.

The last three play the parts of the "lady friends" of James Smith, a bible manufacturer, portrayed by De Haven. Smith had acquired so many millions that he despaired of ever being able to get rid of hem. So when he met the three girls, each of them in financial distress and each with a talent for the fine arts, out of the bigness of his heart Smith set them up in apartments and supplied the funds to enable them to cultivate their talents.

Smith felt safe, because each lived in another city, therefore he did not inform his wife of their existence. But fate brought them together, and Mrs. Smith was "tipped off." Then complications ensued.

The De Havens are without superiors in the field of farce, and they have packed the production with countless laughs.

Negro Still Held In Default of Bail

The negro, Howard Duboise, charged with making a purse-snatching attack on a woman near the Santa Fe viaduct on June 26, and arrested in Berkeley and brought here has been unable to make bail in the sum of $250, required by Police Judge C. A. Odell upon arraignment, and is still in jail.

HER SEVERE HEADACHE ENDED

No one should suffer headache, rheumatic pains, sleep disturbing kidney and bladder ailments when Foley Kidney Pills may be so easily had. Mrs J. D. "Finally I got Foley Kidney Pills and after taking two bottles, my backache is gone, and where I used to lie awake with rheumatic pains, I can ow sleep in comfort and enjoy a good night's rest."

The CROSS-CUT

know where it's going to lead us. There's a cave-in up 'ere, and if we're ever going to get anywhere in this mine, we'll 'ave to go past it. And I'm afraid of what we're going to find when we cut our wye through!"

Clouds of the past seemed to rise and float past Fairchild—clouds which carried visions of a white, broken old man sitting by a window, waiting for death, visions of an old safe and a letter it contained. For a long, long moment, there was silence. Then came Harry's voice again.

"I'm afraid it ain't going to be good news, Boy. But there ain't no wye to get around it. It's got to come out sometime—things like that won't stay hidden forever. And your father's gone now—gone where it can't 'urt 'im."

"I know," answered Fairchild, in a queer, husky voice. "He must have known, Harry—he must have been willing that it come, now that he is gone. He wrote me as much."

"It's that or nothing. If we sell the mine, some one else will find it. And we can't 'it the vein without following the drift to the stope. But you're the one to make the decision."

"He told me to go ahead, if necessary. And we'll go, Harry."

CHAPTER XI

They started forward then, making their way through the slime and silt of the drift floor, slippery and wet from years of flooding. On—on—they stopped.

Progress had become impossible. Before them, twisted and torn and piled about in muddy confusion, the timbers of the mine suddenly showed in a perfect barricade, supplanted from behind by piles of muck and rocky refuse which left no opening to the chamber of the stope beyond. Harry's carbide went high in the air, and he slid forward, to stand a moment in thought before the obstacle. At place after place he surveyed it, finally to turn with a shrug of his shoulders.

"It's going to mean more'n a month of the 'ardest kind of work, Boy," came his final announcement. "'Ow it could 'ave caved in like that is more than I know. I'm sure we timbered it good."

There was only one thing to do—turn back. Fifteen minutes more and they were on the surface, making their plans; projects which entailed work from morning until night for many a day to come. Harry reached for a new ax and indicated another.

"We'll cut ties first," he announced.

And thus began the weeks of effort, weeks in which they worked with crude appliances; weeks in which they dragged the heavy stulls and other timbers into the tunnel and then lowered them down the shaft to the drift, two hundred feet below, only to follow them in their counterbalanced bucket and laboriously pile them along the sides of the drift, there to await use later on. Weeks in which they worked in mud and slime, as they shoveled out the muck and with their gad hooks tore down loose portions of the hanging wall to form a roadbed for their new tram.

It was a slow, galling progress, but they kept at it. Gradually the tram line began to take shape, pieced together from old portions of the track which still lay in the drift and supplemented by others bought cheaply at that graveyard of miner's hopes—the junk yard in Ghadi. At last it was finished; the work of moving the heavy timbers became easier now as they were shunted onto the small tram truck from which the body had been dismantled and trundled along the rails to the cave-in, there to be piled in readiness for their use. And finally—

A pick swung in the air, to give forth a chunky, smacking sound, as it struck water-softened, spongy wood. The attack against the cave-in had begun. A foot at a time they tore away the old, broken, splintered timbers and the rocky refuse which lay piled behind each shivered beam, only to step, carry away the muck, and then repeat. Cold and damp, in the moist air of the tunnel they labored, but there was a joy in it all. Down here they could forget Squint Rodaine and his chalky-faced son; down here they could feel that they were working toward a goal and lay aside the handicap which humans might put in their path.

Day after day of labor and the indentation upon the cave-in grew from a matter of feet to one of yards. A week. Two. Then, as Harry swung his pick, he lurched forward and went to his knees. "I've gone through!" he announced in happy surprise. "I've gone through. We're at the end of it!"

Up went Fairchild's carbide. Where the pick still hung in the rocky mass, a tiny hole showed, darker than the surrounding refuse. There was joy in Harry's voice as he made a momentary survey.

"It's fairly dry, be'ind there," he announced. "Otherwise we'd have been scrambling around in water up to our necks. We're lucky there, any'ow."

Again the attack and again the hole widened. At last Harry straightened. "We can go in now," came finally. "Are you willing to go with me?"

"You mean—?"

But Harry stopped him.

"Let's don't talk about it till we 'ave to. Come on."

Silently they crawled through the opening, the silt and fine rock rattling about them as they did so, to come upon fairly dry earth on the other side, and to start forward. Suddenly, as they walked along, Harry took the lead, holding his lantern far ahead of him, with one big hand behind it, as though for a reflector. Then, just as suddenly, he turned.

"Let's go out," came shortly.

"Why?"

"It's there!" In the light of the lantern, Harry's face was white, his big lips livid. "Let's go—"

But Fairchild stopped him.

"Harry," he said, and there was determination in his voice, "if it's there—we've got to face it. Don't you think that certain people would make an investigation if we should happen to quit the mine now?"

"The Rodaines!"

"Exactly. And how much worse would it be for them to tell the news—than for us?"

"Nobody 'as to tell it—" Harry was striving at his carbide flare—"there's a wye."

"But we can't take it, Harry. In my father's letter was the statement that he made only one mistake—that of fear. I'm going to believe him—and in spite of what I find here, I'm going to hold him innocent, and I'm going to be fair and square and above-board about it all. There's nothing on my conscience—and I know that if my father had not made the mistake of running away when he did, there would have been nothing on his."

Harry shook his head.

"'E couldn't do much else, Boy, Rodaine was stronger in some ways then than he is now. That was in different days. That was in times when Squint Rodaine could 'ave gotten a 'undred men together quicker'n a cat's wink and lynched a man without 'im 'aving a trial or anything. And it 'ud been your father. I'd 'ave done the same as 'e did. I'd 'ave run, too—I'd 'ave paid for it with my life if I didn't, guilty or not guilty. And—" he looked sharply toward the younger man—"you say to go on?"

"Go on," said Fairchild, and he spoke the words, between tightly clenched teeth. Harry turned his light before him, and once more shielded it with his big hand. A step—two, then:

"Look—There—Over by the Foot-wall!"

"Look—there—over by the foot-wall!"

Fairchild forced his eyes in the direction designated and stared intently. At first it appeared only like a succession of disjointed, broken stones, lying in straggly fashion along the footwall of the drift where it widened into the stope, or upward slant on the vein. Then, it came forth clearer, the thin outlines of something which clutched at the heart of Robert Fairchild, which sickened him, which caused him to fight down a sudden, panicky desire to shield his eyes and to run—a heap of age-denuded bones, the scraps of a miner's costume still clinging to them, the heavy shoes protruding in comically treate fashion over many feet. A huddled, grinning skeleton of a human being!

They could only stand and stare at it—this reminder of a tragedy of a quarter of a century agone. Their lips refused to utter the words that strove to travel past them; they were two men dumb, dumb through a discovery which they had forced themselves to face, through a fact which they hoped against, each more or less silently, yet felt sure must, sooner or later, come before them. And now it was here.

And this was the reason that twenty years before, Thornton Fairchild, white, grim, had sought the aid of Hatry and of Mother Howard. This was the reason that a woman had played the part of a man, to all appearances only one of three disappointed miners seeking a new field. And yet—

"I know what you're thinking." It was Harry's voice, strangely hoarse and weak. "I'm thinking the same thing. But it mustn't be. Dead men don't always mean they've died—in a wye to cast reflections on the man that was with 'em. Do you get what I mean? You've said—" and he looked hard into the cramped, suffering face of Robert Fairchild— "that you were going to 'old your father innocent. So 'm I. We don't know, Boy, what went on 'ere. And we've got to 'ope for the best."

Then, while Fairchild stood motionless and silent, the big Cornishman forced himself forward, to stoop by the side of the heap of bones which once had represented a man, to touch gingerly the clothing, and then to bend nearer and hold his carbide close to some object which Fairchild could not see. At last he rose and with old, white features, approached his partner.

"The appearances are 'against us," came quietly. "There's a 'ole in 'is skull that a jury'll say was made by a single jack. It'll seem like some one 'ad killed 'im, and then caved in the mine with a box of powder. But 'e's gone, Boy—your father—I mean. 'E can't defend 'imself. We've got to take 'is part."

"Maybe—" Fairchild was grasping at the final straw—"maybe it's not the person we believe it to be at all."

IMPROVEMENT CLUB WOMEN GIVE DINNER

Four long tables seating about fifty diners each were necessary last night to accommodate the crowds that surged into the banquet room at Pythian Castle to enjoy the chicken dinner served by the ladies of the South Richmond Improvement Club.

It was "some dinner," too.

Take it from us.

"The tables groaned," as the hungry men and a lot of women and a sprinkling of kiddies began the great symphony played with knives and forks and an obligato of clinkling platters.

Stuffed tomatoes, Mayonaise, chicken fricasee, mashed potatoes, buns and coffee and Imperial Valley cantaloupes a la mode, made up a menu that obviously gratified all tastes and appetites.

Candidates were there passing their cards, and their placards held conspicuous places throughout the banquet room.

George O. Meese and Louis E. Davis, candidates for tax assessor, sat side by side, and gave the impression of being long lost brothers.

The women of the club "looked the money" in their starched frocks and smart caps that would have been creditable to one of Fred Harvey's popular places out on the desert.

The good women took in a lot of money.

Stewart Max Sheahan entertained a party of four friends from the Elks' Club.

There literally were hundreds of people, apparently, and surely none went away hungry.

The outgoing officers are George Clark, president; Beth Woodford, vice-president; Florence Clark, secretary-treasurer. The incoming officers are Jane Curnow, president; Carson Wright, vice-president; Grace Lufkin, secretary-treasurer.

Bride and Groom Welcomed Home

"Say, Dick, did you know that Fred brings his bride home tonight from the East?"

By jove, is that true? Well, we will have to collect the wives and go over and welcome the new bride to our city some of these days, won't we?"

"I should say so. We have all heard Fred rave about her so much hat he can't keep us away very long. Say, why not get Jim and Will and teir wives, too, and go over tomorrow evening for a little 'welcome home' party? What do you say?"

"Well, we should go soon, but doggine it I have to have a new suit before I can step out and meet anyone. I am clear out of decent clothes. I may raise the cash by next week but never by tomorrow. You folks had better go on and Betty and I will pay our respects later."

"Not on your life, old man. You go right along, too. Say, if you are needing a suit so gol darn bad, why don't you get it? You know, don't you, that a man can buy some mighty fine clothes at Cherry's with six months to pay? Good value for the money, too. You'd better run out there while the new fall showing of classy two-button suits is most complete. They are at 528 13th street. Then you can join the merrymakers tomorrow."

Cherry's store for women is at 515 13th street.—Advertisement.

THEY ARE MILD BUT EFFECTIVE

A person with inactive or slowed up digestive organs suffers doubly from hot weather. Biliousness, headaches, blurred vision, bad breath, coated tongue are almost certain to be present with a mass of heat-producing undigested food in the stomach. Foley Cathartic Tablets keep the digestive organs active and the system fit and fine, purged of poisons. W. D. Kennedy, Albany, N. Y., says: "Foley Cathartic Tablets are mild but effective." Not habit forming.

There is one very simple formula that will make every month a tough one for the "wild cat" salesman. It is simply this:
